CHILDREN'S PRAYERS. Fold your hands, dear children, Fold their upon each breast, As the shadows of eve are folded. Prayerfully, in the west : For the angels sent from heaven. To close the gates of day, Are waiting to carry back to God What His little children eny. The silver moon is walking And the diamond stars are shining Up in the blue night aky; And the birds you love are sleeping On every forest spray; So fold your hands, dear children, And let us kneel and pray. Silence and peace, like a cartain, Serround all gentle things;

And over your garden flowers The shadows have sprend their wings; And the evening chimes are ringing From the belfry, old and grey; So fold your hands, dear children, It is the time to pray.

The great caricaturist in France, is the Comte Amadée de Noc. better known as thoroughly realizes the Parisian idea of the Londoner—the more so as, like the sailor in Gilbert's ballad, he never laughs and he never smiles, though he is one of the most in veterate practical jokers in existence. A good story about him has recently cropped up. Going into a restaurant where he was unknown, he settled into a corner seat which happened to be generally reserved for a stockbroker who dined in the house every evening. The waiter said nothing; but the stockbroker, coming in, felt wrath at the usurpation, and was about to complain of it. when he recognized the features of the caricaturist. He thought he would have a joke at the expense of "Chain," and, calling the landlord aside, asked him if he know that tall, thin, solemn stranger: No; the land lord had not seen him before. "Ah! Well. then. I advise you to order him out as quickly as possible, or else he will score away all your customers," whispered the stockbroker, "It is the executioner!" The landlord shuddered, but instantly walked up to "Chain," and begged him to depart, adding that he would not ask him to pay for what he had betraved not the slightest surprise. "May I ask who revealed to you that I am the headsman?" he said, in his gravest tones.

"That gentleman yonder." "Ah, quite so," remarked "Chain," imperturbably; "he ought to know me, for I flogged and branded bim at Toulon not two years ago." It is alleged that the stockbroker recorded a vow never to play tricks on "Cham" again.
